Oregon's Soil and Water Conservation Districts are responsible for the conservation of the renewable resource lands owned by local, state, and the federal government to help prevent soil erosion, conserve and develop wildlife, conserve natural beauty, and promote and enhance healthy watershed functions. SWCDs are independently elected boards of directors.

The Oregon Department of Agriculture's SWCDs provide support and limited administrative oversight, with the risk to the SWCDs and the Oregon Department of Agriculture.

Find your SWCD and zone

- Put your address in the search bar of the SWCD website.
- For information about each of Oregon's SWCDs, visit this page by June 10, 2024.

Training opportunities

The Oregon Department of Agriculture Soil and Water Conservation Districts offers trainings to help support district operations. Trainings are available to provide operational technical assistance. Please contact us with questions. This training page provides topics and services.

Recent training materials, presentations, and recordings are available in the resources section of this website.
